Planning for the future of your park

This is a very exciting year as we are reviewing the management plan for Prince Albert National Park.

Park management plans are important documents that guide the future of a park over a 10-15 year horizon. These plans outline the key strategies for maintaining and improving the ecological integrity of the parks, facilitating high-quality visitor experience opportunities and conducting effective public outreach education programs.

The park planning team is in the process of developing a draft plan that will contain a proposed vision for the park, and identify major issues and opportunities to address in the future. Consulting with Indigenous partners, the general public, our stakeholders and partners on this draft plan is a priority for the team.

We need your input to help plan for the future. I encourage you to share your thoughts with us as we undertake this important exercise for Prince Albert National Park.

David Britton, Superintendent

Parks Canada Vision

Canada's treasured natural and historic places will be a living legacy, connecting hearts and minds to a stronger, deeper understanding of the very essence of Canada.

For millennia, Indigenous people have lived in and cared for the land now called Prince Albert National Park. Parks Canada remains committed to the involvement of local Indigenous communities in all aspects of park management. Fostering cultural connections with Indigenous youth and communities and providing opportunities for Indigenous partners to share their culture with park visitors are paramount.

Community and partners are part of who we are

Nearby communities and residents have deep connections to the lands now called Prince Albert National Park. Visitors from all over the world come here to discover and be inspired by the amazing natural landscape and culture. Parks Canada and many others work together to protect and present the natural and cultural heritage of this special place.

By focusing on a shared vision, together we shape the future of the park and its community. The management plan review process is an opportunity to collaborate with Indigenous partners, local community of Waskesiu Lake, stakeholders and partners on the future of Prince Albert National Park.

How you can participate

As the management planning process moves forward we will be providing updates and news bulletins through the park website and local media. Please review and comment on our progress as well as participate in the discussion.
