Ceramic Exports from Scotland: 1806-1810

Introduction

The Clyde Commercial Advertizer, from which these tables were drawn by Mr. Gerard Quail, with the assistance of Ernest M. Brown and Marion McFarlane, is a rich source of British, and especially Scottish, economic history. It was a typical period newspaper, set in 6-point type and difficult to read, but it contained lists of all arriving and departing shipping, by port, together with their cargos and destinations. Here is a sample entry:

Exports from Port-Glasgow

June 13 (1808). Maid of the Mill, Russel, to Newfoundland, with 35 chalders coals, 90 barrels pork, 100 casks butter, 13 boxes, 4 bales, 1 trunk, 25 casks, 10 crates, 5 jars, and 33 kegs, con. 1700 lbs. earthenware, 514 lbs. crown glass, 120 dozen bottles, 700 lbs. tinware, 6 doz. paint brushes, 26 cwt nails, 600 lbs. shoes, 8.0.9. refined sugar in lumps. 14.3.8. do. in loaves, 400 lbs stationery, 12 doz. hats, 14 yards printed cottons, 1104 yards cotton cloth, 204 yards Irish bounty linen, 1642 yards British printed bounty cottons, 795 lbs unwrought leather, and loose 24 pots, 36 frying pans, 4 fifty six weights, 24 tea kettles, 12 goblets with covers, 12 skillets with covers, by Alex. Miller and Co. owners of the vessel - 5 boxes con. 251 dozen leather caps by Archd. Newall.

(Clyde Commercial Advertizer, 22 June 1808)

Mr. Quail's interest in these lists arose from his desire to know the destinations of the wares of specific Scottish factories. The Delftfield Pottery in Glasgow, for example, began to export tin-glazed earthenware to the colonial market from the date of its establishment in 1747 (largely with profits from the Virginia tobacco trade), and was still doing so as late as 1810 (G. Quail to L. Sussman 1978: pers. com.).

North Americans, on the other hand, are more interested in the origin of the wares found here, and these tables provide no little insight into this problem. The continuous stream of Queensware, or creamware, in relatively large quantities, for example, indicates that some of what we regard now as being English creamware may indeed be of Scottish origin. "Cream-coloured earthenware, or Queensware, was first introduced to Glasgow at Thomson & Robertsons Pottery in 1770 by a group of Staffordshire potters led by Robert Bagnell. Both this Company and their rival the Delftfield Company, from 1772 exported creamware to the colonial market."

(G. Quail to L. Sussman 1878: pers. com.).

Unfortunately, one cannot assume that every brick, pipe and plate mentioned in these tables is of Scottish manufacture. In the Clyde Commercial Advertizer, 30 April 1806,

THE DELFTFIELD COMPANY

Beg s leave to acquaint the Public, that, in addition to their usual extensive assortment of POTTERY OF THEIR OWN MANUFACTURE, in which they have of late made considerable improvements, they have, at present, FOR SALE, a great variety of TABLE SETS of BLUE and WHITE and of ENAMELLED WARE, of the best quality and patterns, together with CHINA TEA SETS, and OTHER ARTICLES, which, from their connexion with some of the principal Houses in STAFFORDSHIRE, they are enabled to sell at the lowest prices, and which they flatter themselves will be found deserving of attention.

Orders for exportation, as usual, will be attended to, and the greatest care taken in packing, by applying to William Young, at the works, who will also supply on the best terms, any orders to be shipped from Liverpool.

Glasgow, April, 1806.

The business practices of the nineteenth century could be every bit as complicated as those of the twentieth, but this does not negate the fact that the vast majority of the ceramic shipped from Scottish ports must have had a Scottish manufacturing provenance. Indeed the modest trade documented in these lists proves to be the basis of the large export boom which developed in the Glasgow factories in the 1850s.

Even in this period the Scottish factories are competing on almost an Empire scale with their commercial rivals in England.

The following lists are divided into five columns. From left to right they give the date of departure of the ship, the goods shipped, the port of departure, the destination and the owner of the cargo or exporter. The companies and individuals listed in this final column are, in the newspaper, given five different designations. They are either "owners of the ship", "agents for the vessel", "agents for a person residing abroad", or "master". Frequently they are given no title. Except where a (±) appears to designate the owner of the vessel or the master is noted, no systematic attempt has been made by the compilers to document these differences, indeed, for much of the year 1808, the exporter's names are missing from the original MS. Also missing are the names and registeries of the vessels, although they appear in the Advertizer. These omissions are unfortunate, but not, except for the year 1808, crucial. Those interested in the differences between speculative export and the filling of orders will want to consult the commercial newspapers for themselves in any case.

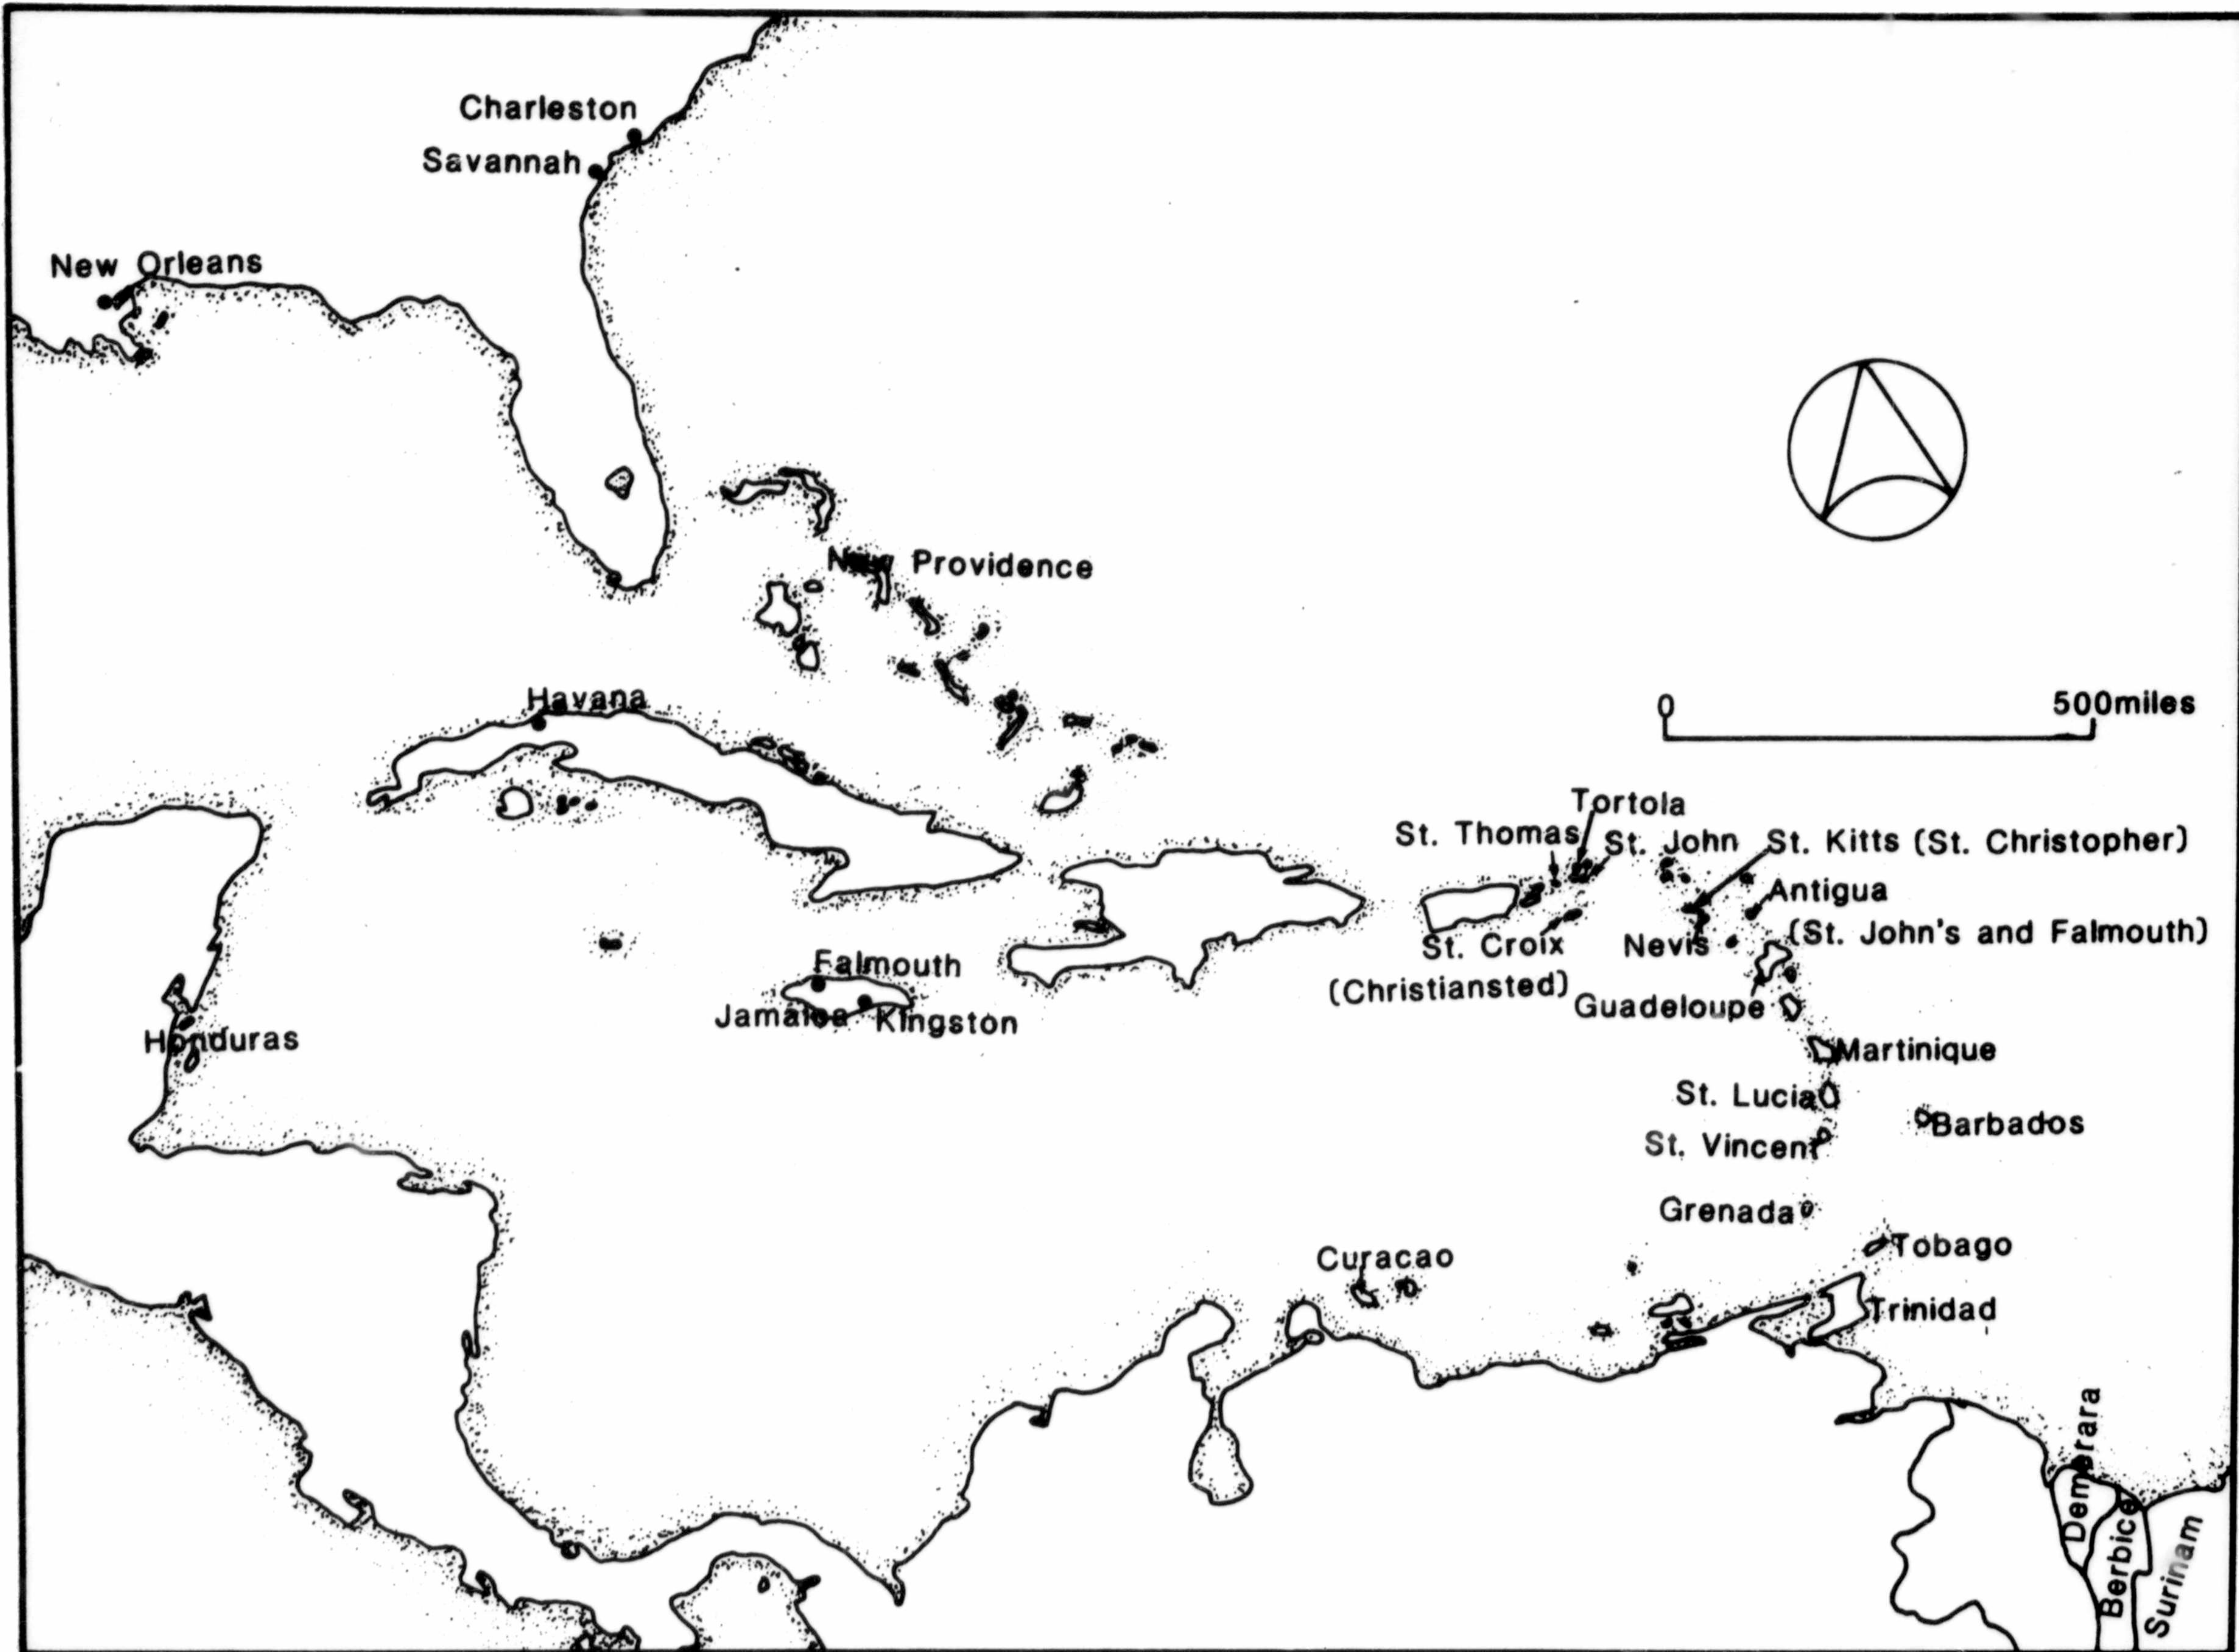

The names of the exporters are, however, important, because it is these names which provide, in the majority of the cases, the tangible link between the continents. The business records of importers are likely to have entries like: "Purchased from Alex. Miller & Co. - 1700 lbs. earthenware". Such entries are of little help unless one can identify Alex. Miller.

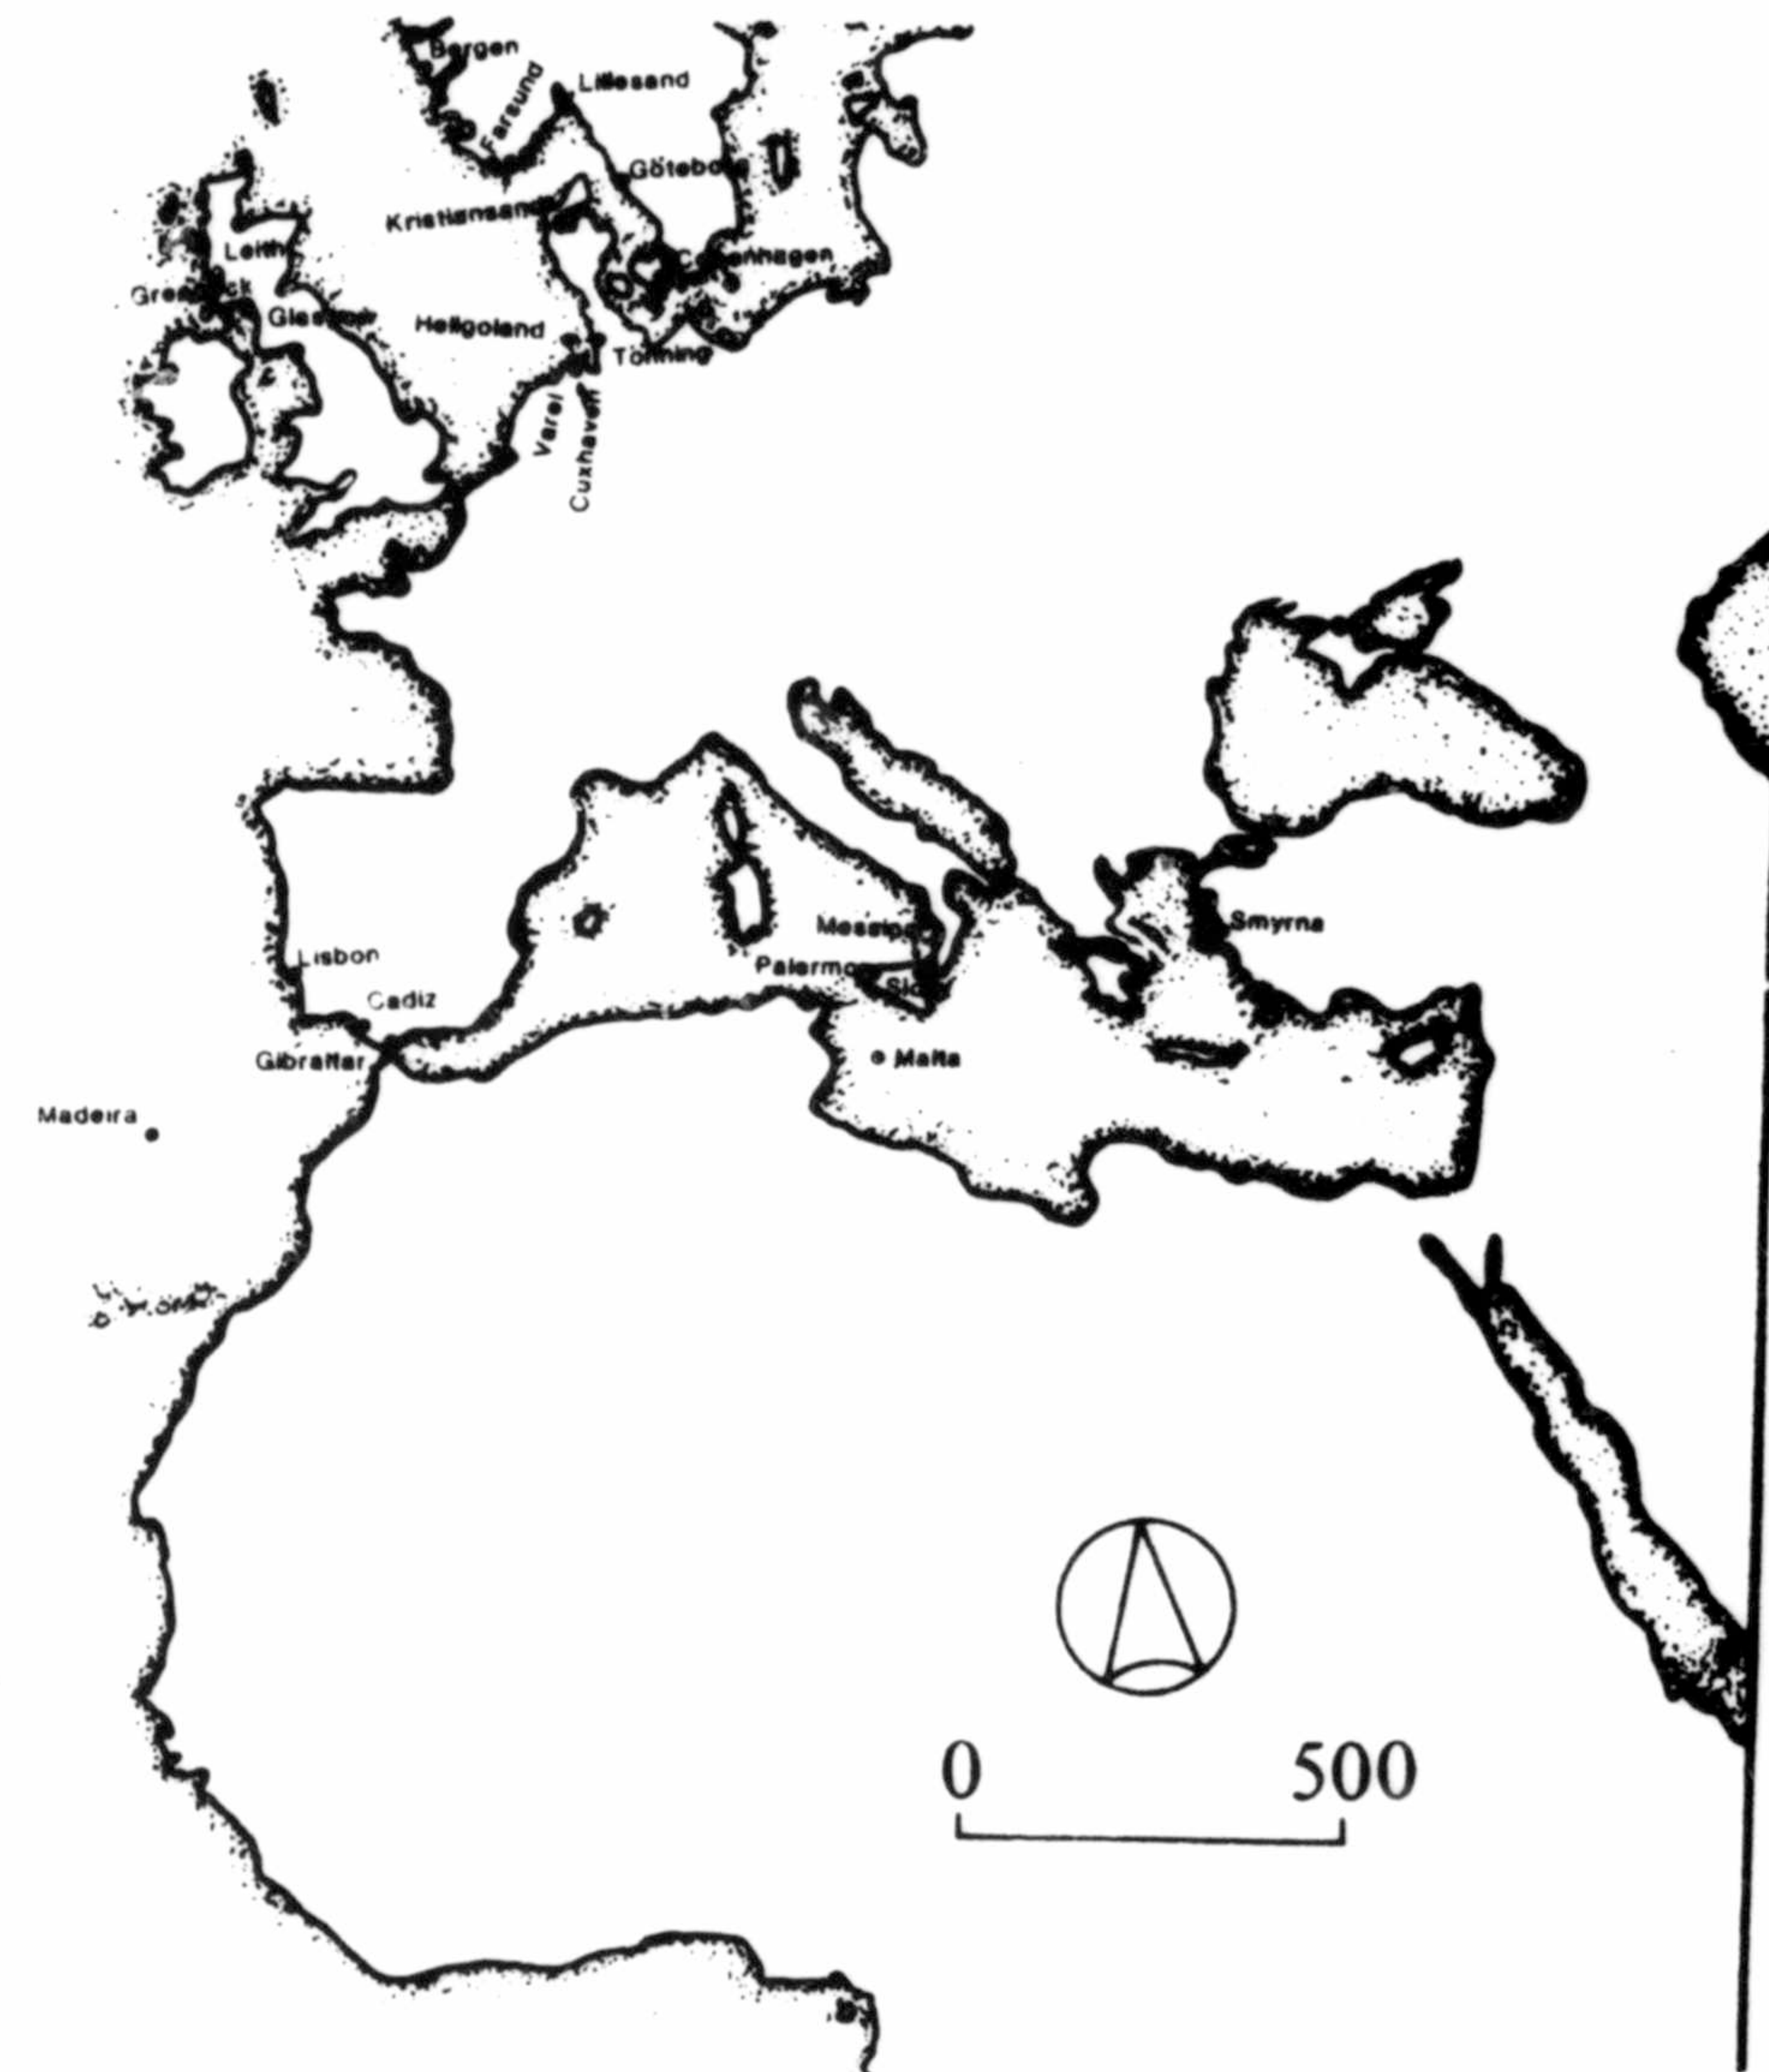

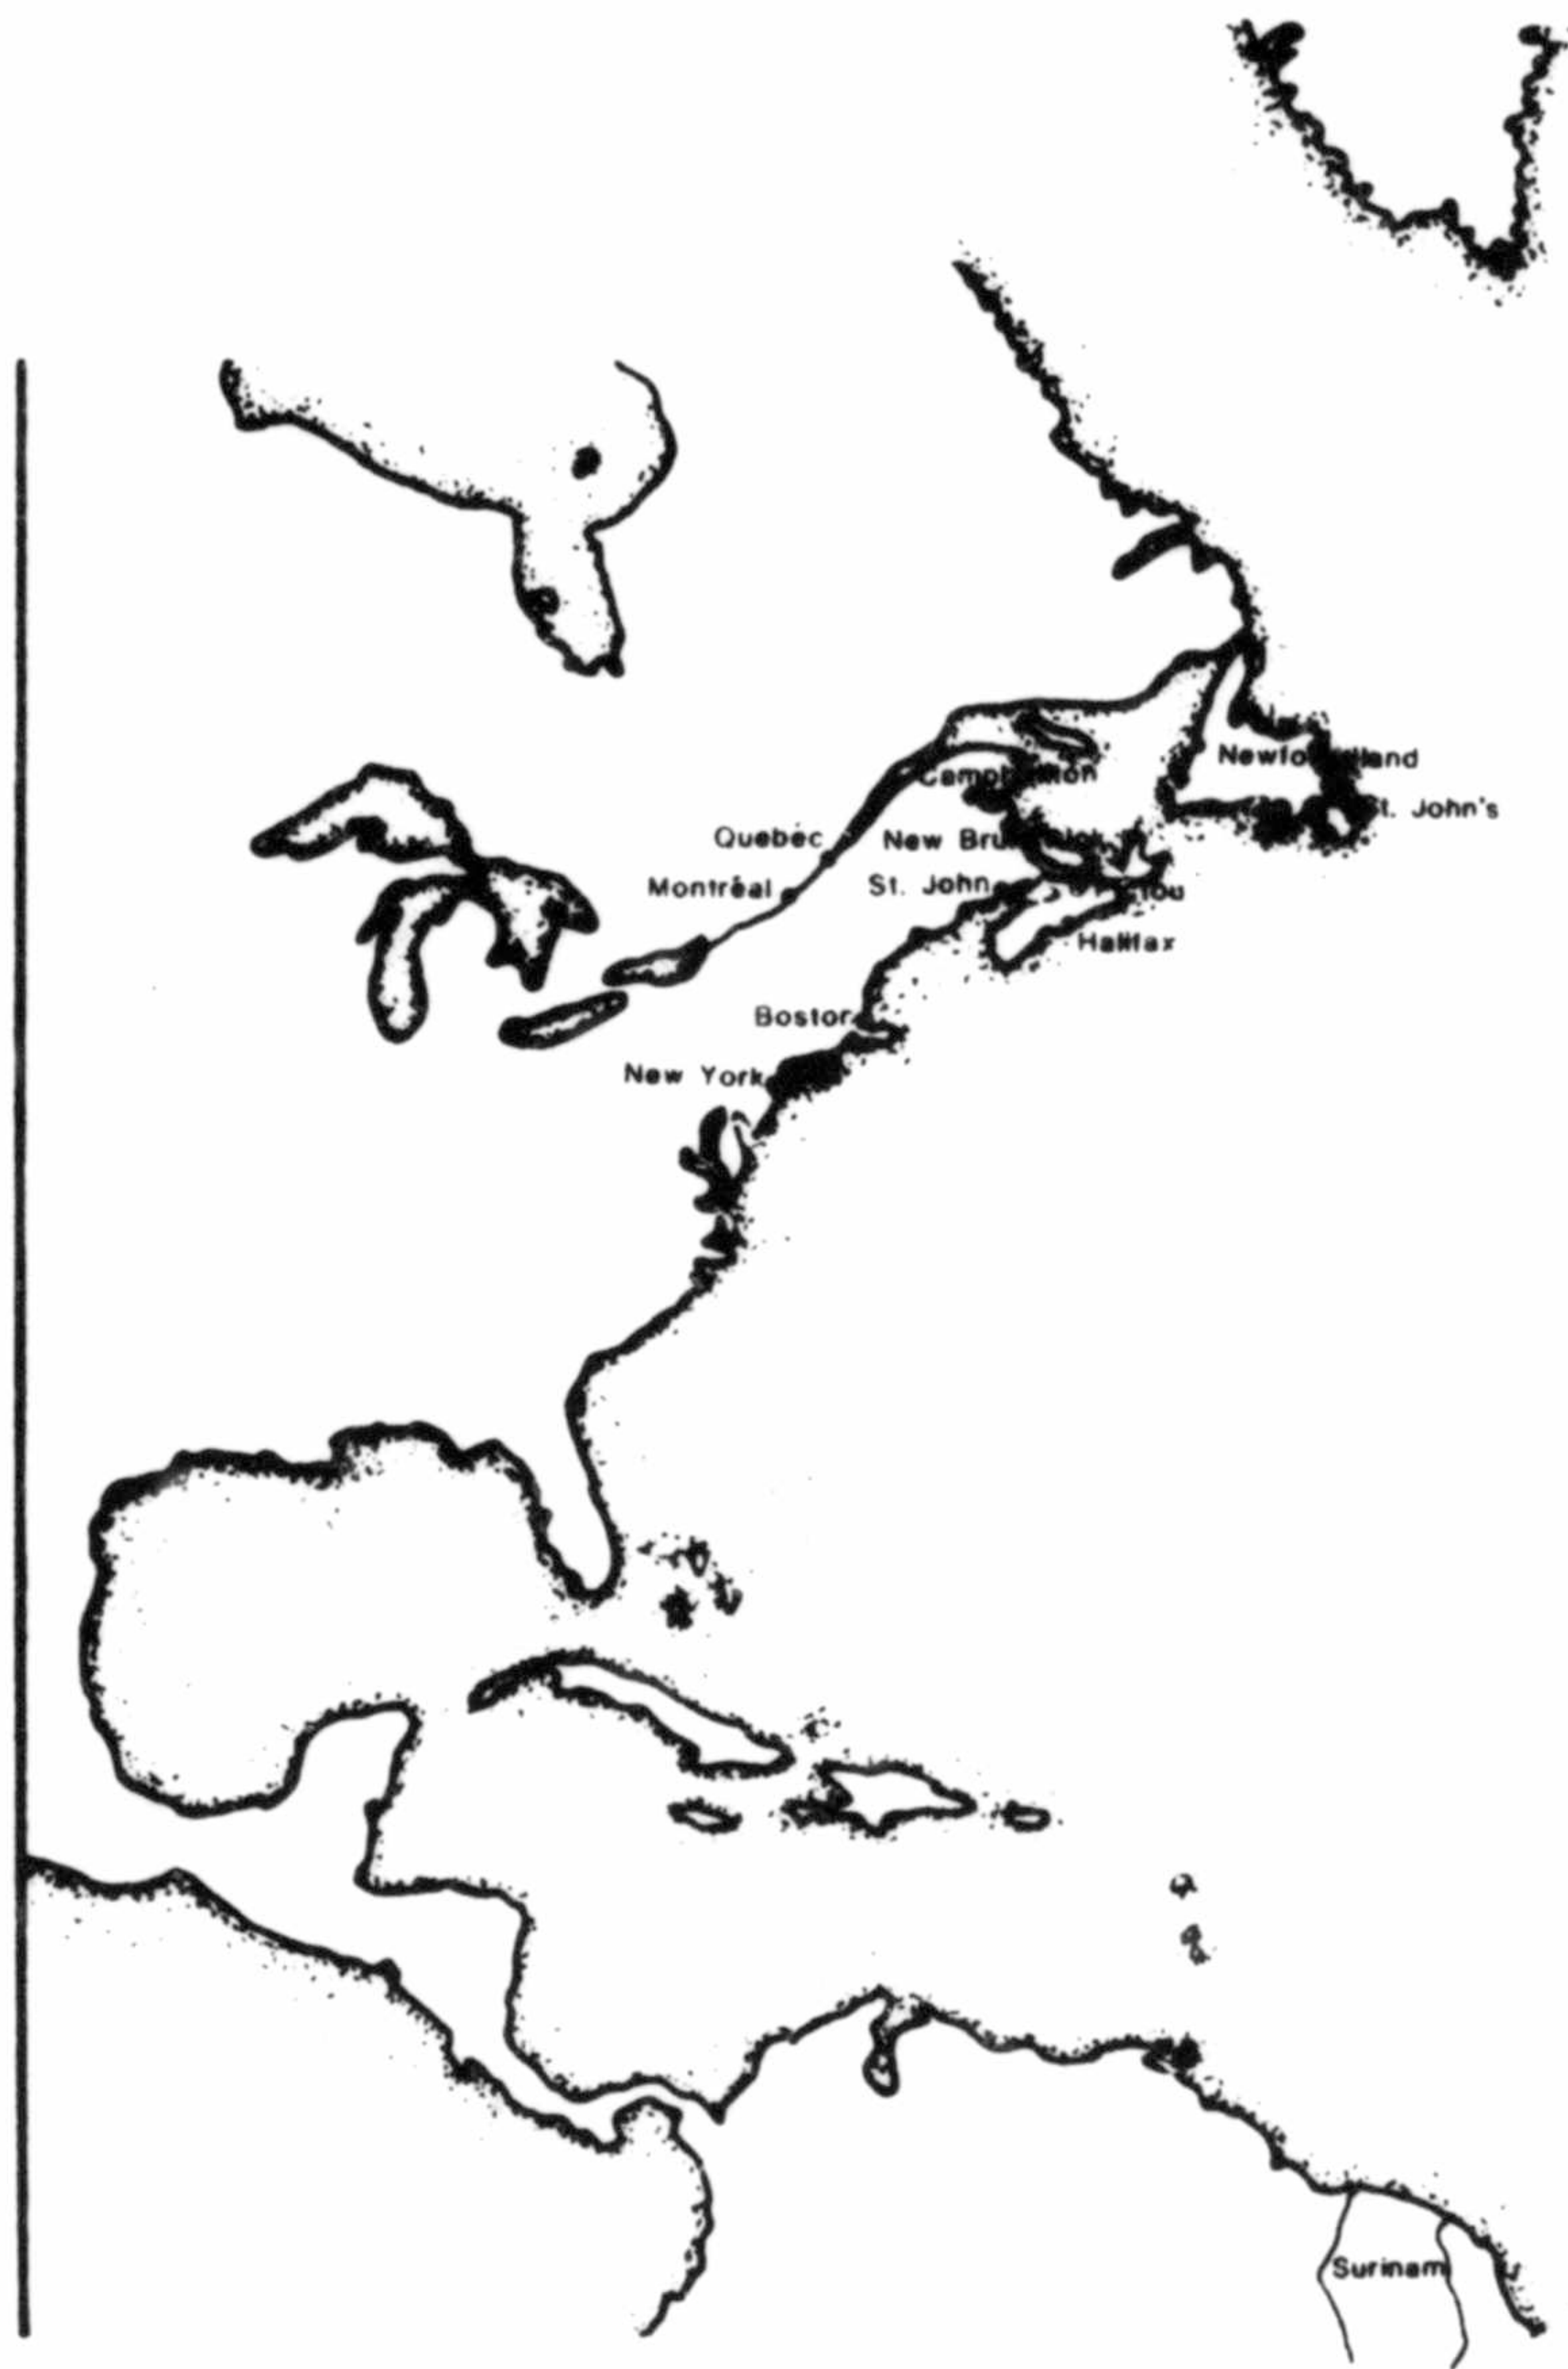

It will be noted that the ceramic trade during these years is largely with the West Indies, although eastern Canada, especially Newfoundland, and the southern U.S. are also receiving Scottish ceramic. One wonders, however, if places like Tortola, Grenada, St. Thomas and Demerara are capable of consuming such quantities of earthenware, or whether these cargos form the basis of a further carrying trade, perhaps to Latin America. The latter appears more probable. (North American readers should not assume that the St. John's mentioned in the lists refers to the Newfoundland or New Brunswick ports. The main port of Antigua is also named St. John's.)

Shipping lists such as these provide the vital link between the British producer and the North American consumer. There are, of course, jobbers and merchants as well between those two extremes, but their records are frequently still extant in the form of day books, journals and account books. For generally unmarked wares such as those of the early nineteenth century, these connections are important. The big step, however, between Europe and North America is across the Atlantic Ocean, and the records of the carrying trade provide the bridge.

John Light Feb. 1982.
