Exportations des céramiques de l'Écosse: 1806-1810

Introduction

Le Clyde Commercial Advertizer d'où ces tableaux ont été tirés par M. Gerard Quail avec l'aide d'Ernest M. Brown et Marion McFarlane constitue une source fertile de renseignements sur l'histoire économique britannique, et plus particulièrement écossaise. Il s'agit d'un journal caractéristique de l'époque, composé en six points et difficile à lire mais contenant les listes de tous les navires qui arrivaient dans un port et en partaient, leur cargaison et leur destination. Par exemple, on pouvait y lire:

Exportations de Port Glasgow

13 juin (1808). Maid of the Mill, Russel, à Terre-Neuve, avec 35 fois 72 boisseaux de charbon, 90 barriques de porc, 100 barriques de beurre, 13 caisses, 4 ballots, 1 malle, 25 barriques, 10 cageots, 5 jarres et 33 caques contenant 1700 livres de poterie, 514 livres de crown-glass, 120 douzaines de bouteilles, 700 livres de ferblanterie, 6 douzaines de pinceaux, 26 fois cent livres de clous, 600 livres de chaussures, 8.0.9 de sucre raffiné en morceaux, 14.3.8 de sucre en pain, 400 livres de papeterie, 12 douzaines de chapeaux, 14 verges de cotonnades imprimées, 1104 verges de toile de coton, 204 verges de toile d'Irlande (subventionnée), 1642 verges de coton imprimé (subventionné), 795 livres de cuir vert; et non emballés, 24 casseroles, 36 poêles à frire, 4 poids de 56 livres, 24 bouilloires pour le thé, 12 gobelets avec couvercle, 12 poêlons avec couvercle, par Alex. Miller and Co., armateurs - 5 caisses contenant 251 douzaines de casquettes de cuir par Archd. Newall.

(Clyde Commercial Advertizer, 22 juin 1808)

L'intérêt de M. Quail pour ces listes est né de sa curiosité de connaître la destination des marchandises expédiées par des manufactures écossaises déterminées. Par exemple, la société Delftfield Pottery de Glasgow a commencé dès sa fondation en 1747 à exporter des faïences sur le marché colonial (en grande partie avec les profits du commerce de tabac de Virginie) et continuait toujours ses exportations en 1818 (G. Quail à L. Sussman 1978: communication personnelle).

Mais comme les Nord-Américains s'intéressent davantage à l'origine des articles fabriqués mis au jour sur place, ces tableaux n'apportent pas beaucoup de lumière sur la question. Ainsi, l'arrivée constante en quantité assez abondante de queensware ou de creamware indique que ce que nous considérons à l'heure actuelle comme du creamware anglais pourrait bien en fait être d'origine écossaise. "La poterie de couleur crème, ou la poterie queensware, a d'abord été introduite en 1770 chez Thomson & Robertsons Pottery de Glasgow par un groupe de potiers du Staffordshire ayant à sa tête Robert Bagnell. À partir de 1772, cette compagnie de même que sa rivale la Delftfield Company ont fait l'exportation de creamware sur le marché colonial." (G. Quail à L. Sussman 1978: communication personnelle).

Malheureusement, on ne saurait affirmer que chaque brique, pipe et assiette mentionnées dans ces tableaux soient de fabrication écossaise. Dans le numéro du 30 avril 1806 du Clyde Commercial Advertizer, sollicite l'honneur d'informer le public qu'en plus de son grand choix habituel de POTERIES DE SA PROPRE FABRIQUE, lequel s'est considérablement amélioré ces derniers temps, elle offre EN VENTE, une grande variété de SERVICE DE TABLE en POTERIE BLEU, BLANCHE et ÉMAILLÉE, de la meilleure qualité et avec les plus jolis motifs, des SERVICES À THÉ et D'AUTRES ARTICLES que, grâce à ses relations d'affaires avec certains des principaux fournisseurs du STAFFORDSHIRE, la compagnie est à même de vendre aux prix les plus bas, et qu'elle considère comme extrêmement avantageux.

LA DELFTFIELD COMPANY

Pour l'exécution des commandes à l'exportation, s'adresser à William Young de l'atelier, qui veillera à ce que l'emballage soit fait avec le plus grand soin et assurera également les meilleures conditions pour toutes les commandes livrées à partir de Liverpool.

Glasgow, avril 1806

Les pratiques commerciales du XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle peuvent avoir été tout aussi compliquées que celles du XX<sup>e</sup> siècle, mais cette constatation n'informe en rien le fait que la plus grande majorité des céramiques expédiées des ports écossais ont dû être fabriquées en Écosse. En fait, le modeste commerce révélé par ces listes semble avoir été le point de départ de l'essor considérable que les fabricants de Glasgow ont connu au cours des années 1850 dans le domaine de l'exportation.

Même au cours de cette période, les manufactures écossaises font concurrence presque dans tout l'Empire à leurs rivaux commerciaux anglais.

Les listes suivantes sont réparties sur cinq colonnes. De gauche à droite elles indiquent la date de départ du navire, les marchandises expédiées, le port de partance, la destination et le nom du propriétaire de la cargaison ou de l'exportateur. Les sociétés et les individus inscrits dans la dernière colonne sont, d'après le journal, désignés sous cinq appellations différentes. Ils sont soit "armateurs", "agents maritimes", "représentants d'une personne vivant à l'étranger" ou "capitaines". Souvent, ils n'ont aucun titre. Sauf lorsqu'une astérisque (*) apparaît pour désigner l'armateur ou lorsque le capitaine est mentionné, les compilateurs n'ont à vrai dire fait aucune tentative systématique pour combler ces lacunes, étant donné que pour une bonne partie de l'année 1808 le nom des exportateurs ne figure pas sur le manifeste original. Le nom et l'inscription des navires manquent également quoiqu'ils apparaissent dans l'Advertizer. Ces omissions, bien que déplorables, ne sont pas cruciales, si ce n'est pour l'année 1808. De toute manière, les personnes qui s'intéressent aux différences entre la théorie et la réalité voudront consulter elles-mêmes les journaux commerciaux.

Toutefois, le nom des exportateurs a son importance parce que c'est lui qui, dans la majorité des cas, constitue le lien tangible entre les continents. Il est probable que les registres d'affaires des importateurs contiennent des indications du genre: "acheté à Alex. Miller & Co. - 1700 livres de poterie". Ces renseignements ne sont pas d'une grande utilité à moins de pouvoir identifier le dénommé Alex. Miller.

Il convient de faire remarquer que le commerce des céramiques pendant cette période se fait en grande partie avec les Indes Occidentales, quoique l'est du Canada, notamment Terre-Neuve, et le sud-est des États-Unis reçoivent également des céramiques écossaises. Néanmoins, on se demande si dans des lieux comme Tortola, Grenade, Saint-Thomas et Demerara il était possible de consommer de telles quantités de poterie, à moins que ces cargaisons n'aient formé la base d'un autre transport de marchandises, par exemple vers l'Amérique latine. Cette dernière hypothèse semble la plus probable. (Le lecteur nord-américain ne doit pas croire que le St. John's mentionné dans les listes renvoie aux ports de Terre-Neuve ou du Nouveau-Brunswick. Le port principal d'Antigua porte également le nom de St. John's).

Des connaissances comme ceux-ci constituent le lien vital entre le producteur britannique et le consommateur nord-américain. Bien sûr, il existe entre ces deux extrêmes des intermédiaires et des commerçants, mais leurs registres subsistent encore souvent sous la forme de mains courantes et de livres de comptes. Ces repères sont importants dans le cas des articles généralement non marqués comme ceux du début du XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. Mais le fossé immense que constitue l'océan Atlantique entre l'Europe et l'Amérique du Nord peut être comblé par les registres des transports de marchandises.

En raison de la nature spéciale et archaïque des termes utilisés, la liste des biens de consommation et des fournisseurs publiée dans les annonces originales n'a pas été traduite.
